

Stephen J. Brady
Senior Vice President, Corporate Communications
Sodexo, Inc.

Stephen J. Brady is senior vice president of corporate communications for Sodexo, Inc. He is responsible for all corporate communications and is a member of the company's senior executive team. Mr. Brady oversees corporate brand management, public and media relations, advertising, employee communications, and community relations programs. Mr. Brady also serves as president of the Sodexo Foundation, the independent charitable arm of Sodexo, Inc.

Mr. Brady began his career with Sodexo North America in 1990 as vice president of strategic development. Throughout his tenure with the company, he has also served as vice president of healthcare operations and regional vice president of education operations. He later served as vice president of marketing and communications before being appointed senior vice president of corporate communications. In 1996 he launched Sodexo's STOP Hunger program and in 1999 formed the Sodexo Foundation with the mission to be a driving and creative force to create a hunger free America.

Mr. Brady holds a bachelor's degree in psychology from Boston University and attended the Colgate-Darden Graduate School of Business. He currently serves as the president of the Sodexo Foundation and is a member of the board of the Sodexo Foundation of Canada as well as the Alliance to End Hunger.

Mr. Brady is married, has four children, and resides in the Washington, DC area.